▪ Antiques for Everyone returns with childhood memories

Antiques for Everyone is returning to the NEC from 30th October to 2nd November 2008 with a fascinating feature of childhood memories.

A selection of antiques dealers from around the world have brought together their favourite toys and belongings for the feature, which is sponsored by BBC Homes and Antiques. Puppets, toy horses, zoetropes and dolls will be amongst the memories on show for the duration of the fair, giving visitors' young and old the chance to reminisce about their youth.

In addition to the exciting new feature, fans of The BBC's Antiques Roadshow will get a chance to meet presenter and dealer John Bly at this season's fair.

Britain's largest vetted and datelined antiques fair has perfect presents for the whole family with prices ranging from £10 to £100,000, from Victorian novelties to the finest paintings, there are gifts to suit any pocket as well as offering unique Christmas gift ideas.

With an unrivalled range of authentic antiques totaling more than £20m on display from more than 400 specialists, visitors can browse fine period furniture, pottery, glass, sculpture, jewellery, fashion, arts and crafts and much more.

Antiques for Everyone is the perfect day out for everyone, from private collectors and regular trade buyers to interior design enthusiasts.
